DFO enforcement blitz identifies 37 violations

Fisheries and Oceans Canada fishery officers conducted a Vancouver Island-wide roadside enforcement blitz on July 19. At the Port Hardy checkpoint on Highway 19, officers checked 28 vessels and 51 fishers between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. as part of the broader coordinated operation.

They identified 37 violations under the Fisheries Act and Regulations.

Most violations involved fish-processing requirements and undersized fish.

Fishery officers from eight Vancouver Island detachments, supported by the Victoria Whale Protection Unit and the National Fisheries Intelligence Service, conducted inspections on highway feeder routes between Port Hardy and Victoria.

The operation also included participation in select communities from the RCMP, the BC Conservation Officer Service, and Commercial Vehicle Safety and Enforcement officers under their respective mandates.

The blitz was timed for the first weekend after current Chinook conservation measures and retention prohibitions were lifted, providing a visible reminder to recreational fishers to follow the rules for all fish species as the summer season intensifies. It was the first simultaneous roadside inspection blitz of this scope on Vancouver Island.

Preliminary statistics from the full operation show officers inspected approximately 200 personal vehicles, 18 commercial transport vehicles, and 85 vessels.

who ignore the rules gain an unfair advantage, undermine fishery management, and threaten resource sustainability.

Excess harvesting can also lead to management changes or closures, reduce economic benefits for coastal communities and tourism, and threaten traditional food sources for Indigenous peoples.

DFO asks the public to report suspicious or potentially illegal fishing activity, or any contravention of the Fisheries Act and Regulations, by calling 1-800-465-4336 or emailing DFO. ORR-ONS.MPO@dfo-mpo.gc.ca. DFO's Conservation and Protection Program supports the federal management of Canada's marine resources through integrated patrols on land, sea, and air. For more information about the work fishery officers do, visit <http://www.dfo-mpo.gc.ca/career-carriere/enf-loi/description-eng.htm>.

Dunk tank raises funds for leukemia journey

Port Hardy RCMP Corporal Anthony Giroux watches a baseball head towards the bull's eye during an Applewood Ford Dunk Tank fund-raiser July 19 at Filomi Days.

By Kathy O'Reilly

Filomi Days offered the opportunity to help support the family of six-year-old Isla Corbett - recently diagnosed with cancer.

Applewood Ford held a Dunk Tank fund-raiser July 18 and 19 that saw Port Hardy Mayor Pat Corbett-Labatt (the youngster's grandmother), Member of Parliament Aaron Gunn, an RCMP officer on Sunday, and many other incredible volunteers climb into the tank - raising $2,644.

On July 7, 2026, Isla began experiencing severe lower back pain prompting her parents, Danielle Shaw and Chris Corbett (Archie), to take her to the emergency department.

It quickly became clear that Isla was seriously unwell, and she was airlifted to BC Children's Hospital in Vancouver.

She has since been diagnosed with acute lymphoblastic leukemia (ALL), a cancer of the blood and bone marrow.

Isla has begun intravenous chemotherapy and will remain in hospital while her response to treatment is closely monitored.

Her oncology team anticipates she will require treatment for the next two and a half years, with ongoing care at BC Children's Hospital.

"At Filomi Days, I was more than happy to take a couple of plunges in the dunk tank to help raise money in support of Isla's family during this difficult time," posted Gunn on Facebook.

A GoFundMe page has also been set up as well - Supporting Isla's family through her leukemia journey. So far over $30,000 has been raised.

Another North Island family is also coping with a cancer.

Brittany Falconer has organized a GoFundMe for her mom Heidi Falconer-Mathieson to help cover costs for the next few months.

Heidi, a Port Hardy gymnastics coach for 20 years has now entered palliative care, as cancer has spread to her bones and brain.

She owned and operated Funtastic Gymnastics in Port Hardy.

Heidi was first diagnosed with cancer when Brittany was around 15 years old. She has been through two decades of on and off treatment.

The GoFundMe is - Support Coach Heidi In Her End Of Life Care.

So far almost $20,000 has been raised.

Cougar warning issued for Hardy Bay Road

A warning was issued July 21 after multiple cougar sightings along Hardy Bay Road. The cougar appeared comfortable in residential areas moving in broad daylight across peoples' backyards. Anyone who sees this cougar, is asked to report it to 1-877-952-7277. According to WildSafe BC Port Hardy, cougar attacks are rare but can be fatal, especially if young children are involved. In all cases you must fight back as cougar attacks are always predatory and the cougar sees you as prey. Use rocks, sticks, or whatever you have at hand to protect yourself. Consider carrying bear spray with you year-round when recreating in cougar country. If you see a cougar that is watching you, maintain eye contact and speak to it in a loud firm voice. Reinforce the fact that you are a human and not an easy target. Back out of the area and seek assistance or shelter. For further information email porthardy@wildsafebc.com.

Mini Challenger makes a big impression at Filomi Days

By Kathy O'Reilly

A miniature logging truck float made a big impression during this year's Filomi Days parade.

The model drew attention because it represents one of Vancouver Island's most distinctive pieces of logging history in a form people can see up close.

The machine was a miniature model of the "Challenger" off-highway logging truck built by John Casanave in 1987 with his partner Eric Netzer. The Challenger is a completely functional, running 1/3-scale drivable model.

For comparison, a full-sized Challenger weighs 63,000 pounds, while the model weighs 2,800 pounds. The full-sized truck's tires are 1400 by 25; the model's tires are 18 inches.

Only about 14 or 15 full-sized Challenger trucks were ever manufactured. Built for the rugged terrain and heavy loads of the B.C. logging industry, they were 20 per cent heavier than standard trucks and featured sliding drivetrains for easier maintenance.

The mini model is on display and operated at the Industrial Heritage Centre in Port Alberni.

Challenger Enterprises Ltd. is now located in Nanaimo.

Water in Port McNeill is safe to drink from the tap again.

Port McNeill was under a boil watery advisory after samples at the Old School and harbour office tested positive for trace amounts of Coliform and E.Coli (Escherichia coli).

As a precaution, Island Health issued a Boil Water Advisory. All other water sample sites were clear.

The town needed two clean samples taken 24 hours apart to be given a clean bill of health.

Rebuilt Cafe and Pub open

By Kathy O'Reilly
An iconic North Island eatery has literally risen from the ashes.

The completely rebuilt Killer Whale Cafe and Old Sallery Pub at Telegraph Cove are officially open for the season.

Owners Gordie and Marilyn Graham oversaw the reconstruction, using local North Island contractors to recreate the historical aesthetic of the original buildings, which were destroyed in a New Year's Eve 2024 fire that damaged the historic boardwalk community's waterfront.

The new buildings showcase skilled craftsmanship and custom artwork.

"We are ecstatic about the pub and restaurant being open once again. Gordie and I and the staff at Telegraph Cove Resort wish to thank all those who worked so hard to bring it back," said Marilyn.

"There are many new features. We have kept the historical look, and some similar features inside," she said.

The rebuild blends familiar details with practical updates. The restaurant booths were replaced with tables and chairs, the kitchen area is larger, ceilings have been raised, lighting has been updated, and the bathrooms are now in the pub.

"There is some new décor, including many things people have donated. I think you must come and see it to fully understand the changes. It is all very beautiful," Marilyn said.

"The contractor and his team have done a beautiful job of all the woodworking," she said.

"The workers have been very proud of bringing it back to life."

Locals take to Filomi stage and others this summer

The Low Flyers landed on the stage at Filomi Days in Carrot Park in Port Hardy July 19. Lynne Penhale performed with them and had a solo acoustic set as well.

“I was thrilled to be part of this year’s festival,” says Penhale.

The Low Flyers are two experienced musicians, Paul Mignot on keys and voice and Chad Matthews on bass and voice.

They are based in Port Hardy and play a variety of genres including blues, rock, folk, funk, R&B, and jazz. They bring players into the fold depending on the gig, sometimes with a horn section.

Low Flyers will also be playing at the North Island Music Festival in Port McNeill Aug. 23.

Penhale is a singer-songwriter based in Port Hardy. Penhale has rich vocals and dynamic music about personal growth. Her unique sound is a blend of folk, soft-rock, pop, classical avant-garde, and jazz. Originally from Quesnel, Penhale grew up surrounded by nature and playing outside in the snow.

She has been classically trained since age seven and is now a multi-instrumentalist with a degree in music. Penhale recovered from a significant health crisis at age 27 that has shaped her music, bringing a wide emotional range to her performances. Her main influences are Sarah McLachlan, Billy Joel, and the “divine one”-Sarah Vaughan. Her music

Sointula Museum exhibit traces pioneer women

By Kathy O'Reilly
A new Sointula Museum exhibit tracing the letters, memories, and legacy of the island's early Finnish pioneer women will soon continue its journey in Finland. The exhibit, "Leaving, Arriving, Staying" by Sointula artist Kerri Wallis, is now on display before it travels overseas, said Sointula Museum Manager Tammy Hampel. The exhibit will be at the Sointula Museum until Aug. 31.

Hanging boat sculptures weave together letters, photos, and family histories connected to Sointula's Finnish roots, alongside a collaborative piece by Robin Smith and Wallis titled "Letters from Home: Olga's Story."

Wallis, a Sointula resident with a background in spinning, weaving, and dyeing, has more recently turned to fabric and paper sculpture as well as painting.

In her artist statement, Wallis said the project grew from an exploration of remembering and memory, including the emotional and physical fragments of images, shapes, stories, and feelings that continue to influence lives and communities.

The boat frames were built from leftover wood from a nearby boat restoration project.

The fabric on the boats was sourced from the local thrift shop, while the colour used to dye them came from handmade ink created by Wallis from alder cones and bark harvested on Malcolm Island.

The writing on the boats is from original letters sent to Finland by Olga Myntti and Katri Ricksman in 1904 and 1905, respectively, translated by community members and handwritten on the boats by Wallis.

Wallis said community members supported the project by constructing wooden frames and sharing history, stories, photos, and feedback that helped bring the exhibit together.

After leaving the Sointula Museum, the exhibit will travel to the Finnish Labour Museum Werstas (Työväen-museo Werstas) in Tampere, Finland, where it will become part of the upcoming exhibition The Time of Utopia. The exhibition explores the history of three Finnish Utopian communities: Sointula, Amur, and Kylväjä. Of the three, Sointula is the only community that continues to thrive.

Wallis reflected on the exhibit's journey: "Sending my exhibit to Finland feels like completing a circle, clasping hands across the ocean, and deepening the connections between our communities. Finland sent us its brave people, culture, and cooperative ideals. This exhibit honours and celebrates those gifts!"

The Sointula Museum is open daily from 12 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Some bits and pieces on protein and salt

By Susan Holbrook

This week I thought I would hit a few topics to follow up on past articles and just share some thoughts and ideas.

Last time I talked about protein and in particular Good Protein brand which I mix into smoothies, or my favourite Tree Island grass fed plain Greek yogurt. I can get close to 40 grams just at breakfast doing that. If anyone is dealing with an elderly person or a child that isn't getting enough protein, think about this as a solution because there are many flavours and once mixed into yogurt, it's like eating a yummy pudding. There's not only extra protein in Good Protein but fibre and many other nutrients as well. The yogurt provides some probiotics, and you can toss in some nuts or berries if you like. I found the best price at the grocery store in Port McNeill plus they stock larger bags which happened to be on sale last week. Also, they have a very good selection of flavours.

I know I've mentioned that I make my own dips like tzatziki and hummus because all that I've seen on the shelf have canola oil in them which I avoid.

This week I finally discovered a brand of dips (Habibi's) that use no oil. They too are at the PM grocery store so I'm trying the Lebanese style tzatziki and garlic and basil hummus.

I found a new salt there, too. Blue Salt by Eupherbia. It is hand harvested from ancient, dried seas and according to the label, is one of the rarest salts in the world. They say it's higher in potassium and lower in sodium than regular table salt. It has a uniquely bold taste (I agree) and a blueish-grey colour. So, since it's from dried seas, we aren't dealing with the plastic issue from salt harvested from today's polluted oceans.

I do want to give iodized table salt it's due though because in the 1920's iodine was wisely added to prevent widespread iodine deficiency, which causes goiter (enlarged thyroid gland), hypothyroidism, and stunted cognitive development in children. Salt was chosen due to its affordability and it's a widely consumed staple which ensured consistent daily intake across the population.

So, if you prefer to use pink Himalayan salt or Blue Salt which is not iodized, think about supplementing with an appropriate amount of iodine. I use a liquid iodine from my nutraceutical company but investigate help supplements as well. Be sure to get professional advice on the dosage as too much isn't good either.

So, my best advice to you is to develop a strategy for yourself and family. Make sure you have on hand some foods that are time saving and make your own when there is time.

Life is busy and our eating habits can suffer due to this. I love cooking but I know it isn't for everybody so just do your best and take some healthy shortcuts when need be.
